THE BEAUTIFUL WARRIOR OF THE PEOPLE

Once upon a time in a village far away in a big and beautiful castle, there lived a family of kings and their prince, Jerry, a kind, respectful, affectionate, handsome, intelligent boy, etc. Jerry was like the village's real hero.

Every day Jerry lived in fear of the rumours told by the villagers that a big dragon was heading on the borders of the prince's lands and people who were walking through the village. Jerry's greatest fear was that the big dragon would find on his quest, which was his job, the thing he loved most in the world, because it had been with him since he was a little boy.

The most shocking news he had ever heard came, all the seeds in the village had been eaten by the big dragon, knowing that only his goat was left, he decided to go and look for it to fetch it off and leave the rest of the village alone, without fear of doing.

He got up early in the morning and decided to go and kill the dragon, heading towards the area where the dragon was, which was located on the outskirts of the village.

Convinced that he would find it there, he entered and there was no sign of the great dragon. On his way back to his castle he passed by the village square, the place where almost the whole village used to be, from a distance he saw many people crowded in the middle of the square, he went to see what was happening, suddenly he heard his goat creaking, he ran out and found that the dragon wanted to eat it, he reacted quickly and stepped in to save his goat. He saw that there was nothing he could do because he had nothing to kill it, he was already dead when suddenly a beautiful warrior in armor appeared, she thrust her sword into the heart of the big dragon and he died to death little by little.

Jerry instantly fell in love with the warrior who saved his life, and in gratitude he gave her a bouquet of roses.

The whole square was paralysed for a moment by what was happening.

Thanks to that beautiful warrior neither Jerry nor his goat died.

Everyone happily went to the castle to take the beautiful warrior to rest.

A few years later they decided to get married and they were happy and had a happy ending.

When she was going to the dragon's cave, she heard a familiar voice of a man. She didn't care about this but a chill ran through her body. Suddenly, she found the dragon nervous and crying alone. At first, she thought it was a trap but she finally decided to get closer and asked him what happened. The dragon told her everything. 'You all thing I'm evil but I'm not the one who is doing this. Your favourite knight, George, is behind all of this. You think he is dead? He's alive!'. The princess was shocked, she couldn't believe what she had just heard so she wanted to confront Saint George.

THE TRUTH ABOUT SAINT GEORGE

By Andrea Cárdenas and Manahil Anis

The dragon guided her at the back of the cave, where George had the dragon's mum kidnaped. When he saw the princess, he tried to escape but she took out a sword and pushed him against the wall and asked him with tearing eyes: 'Why did you do all of this? I loved you but you are a liar!'. The knight didn't have time to answer. The princess, in a fit of anger, stabbed the sword into his chest. He fell and died at the moment. A black liquid came out of his body and this got transformed into stone. The princess was speechless but she realized that Saint George wasn't really a person, he was a monster!

In the end, the dragon thanked her and promised to leave the village and never kill anyone again. The princess (nowadays queen) was so happy to have saved her people and they all lived happily ever after.

Dragons in our heads.

It all started when the people were happy, in a small town in the middle of somewhere.

There it was a special young girl loved by all the people, but that girl was special, she had to face up to some dragons inside her head. She had fought before to a lot of them, but sometimes she had too many of them, and she couldn't against all of them. To complicate it, in the town there was one ancient legend that said that a person who have dragons in its head and he or she couldn't, against them, it could happen a terrible thing that could affect all the world, and no one wanted to verify that.

So that pretty girl, with all of that dragons of different measures, some bigger than others. She had to live with them all the time, unless she defeated them, but there always appeared more and more. One day, the situation arrived at a point that a giant dragon appeared on her head, a dragon that she couldn't fight against alone. And all the village knew what it would occur if the girl didn't defeat the dragon, so they started to search people who could defeat that enormous problem. The first days, all the young people of the town went to her home to try to fight and defeat the dragon, because all loved her, and they wanted to help, yeah help. People tried it in every possible way with, love, food, making her laugh, talking with her, but no one could defeat the dragon, and the oldest people of the town started to worry and made an announcement, and said that the person who could defeat that enormous dragon would have everything he wanted. So with that announcement, people from all the surroundings of the town came. The days passed as the people who tried to defeat that enormous dragon, but no one, and when I say no one is no one. Imagine that people of all kinds went to the town, intelligent people, stupid, handsome and disastrous, moody and outgoing people, but not anyone get by with to kill the dragon.

So, when the humans of the village saw that, they gave up and started to think what could happen, and at the same time, the oldest villagers started to look after the girl. But one day she got away from the village. She was tired of everything; she had seen that nobody could understand her and ran as far as he could. Suddenly, in one enormous forest she met a boy, that ancient legend doesn't tell what his name was, only one dared to name that boy as Jordi, but I would not bet on that name.

At first, the girl was scared, because she thought the boy would try to kill that enormous dragon, but the boy told the girl that he wasn't going to kill anyone and ask her if she could help him because he had a lot of small dragons on it's head, then with a lot of effort and some months, the girl helped him and defeat most of them.

When they were about to finish, the boy told her to stop helping him, he was so glad about her and confessed that he had accepted to live with some of them and told her if she needed help with that enormous dragon, which sometimes you accept that you have to live with, but you could make them smaller to make it easy to live.

The girl declined that offer, she was okay as she was, and they didn't notice that the enormous dragon had become smaller with the time.

No one has known ever since about these two guys. Some people say that they are still helping each other, others believe that since that we all have dragons in our heads, but who knows?

OUT OF SIGHT

It was just a little white lie, but I still wish I hadn't said it. I perfectly remember the day when Sabrina arrived, everyone was thrilled waiting for our new classmate. Since the moment she appeared, I couldn't stop looking at her shining eyes. I was curious because the teacher had helped her to sit as if it was her first time doing it. At that moment, I thought the teacher was introducing Sabrina, but honestly, I was not paying attention. Instead, I was enjoying her dazzling green eyes with giant glasses.

Later, I tried to talk with her. Luckily, Sabrina and I met in the bathroom. While we were washing our hands I kept staring at her. I had supposed she needed a towel so I took mine and gave it to her, but she didn't want to take it. I felt humiliated, I just wanted to be friends but she avoided me! That's why every time people asked me about her I said she seemed to be annoying, irritating and conceited. Soon, rumours quickly spread through the school. Sabrina wasn't happy about it.

She was there again, reading a book in the library. I saw her reading while her eyes were focus on the sky; her fingers were trailing on the book's pages as if she was trying to decipher something. After a while, I decided to turn back and leave the room. To my surprise, I tripped over a chair and fell to the floor. Then, something unexpected happened, the mysterious arrogant girl tried to help me to stand up, to be completely hones, I didn't know if she was helping me because her eyes were looking other way while her hands were taking mine.

From that day on, I thought that if I hadn't lied, we would probably have got along. I learned not to judge anyone before meeting them, who knows, maybe this person was ignoring you, due to the simple fact that her eyes didn't let her see you.

SNEAKY BOOTS

It was just a little white lie, but I still wish I hadn't said it. It all happened 5 years ago, when I was in high school. Me and my friend lived in a small town and we were thinking of going to a party.

Unfortunately, I knew my father wasn't going to let me go, as he is very strict, so we had to come up with a plan for me to sneak out.

After a lot of thinking, I decided to leave in the middle of the night, while my parents were sleeping. What I didn't expect back then, was that my new black boots were going to be my doom.

In the end, as I was walking through the hallway, the squeaky sounds of the books woke my father up, making him aware of my intentions. He began to scold me and I felt so embarrassed that I couldn't even look at him. There's no need to say that I was grounded for a month.

ABOUT PRINCESSES AND DRAGONS

That couldn't be the end.

Not now that she was in the top of the tower. It had been a long travel to reach that spot.

She was so tired even before going up these stairs. The panic attacked her and she found herself running towards tall trees that seemed to extend by miles. A weak mist covered her the way she could only see her foot but not much away from them. Something was running after her and it wasn't going to stop. She realized that she couldn't hide, so she held the end of her dress and continue running faster than ever. She started to hear noises that came for everywhere as the adrenaline was increasing in her body system. Not much later, she arrived to an enormous tower and without stop to think it twice she went up the stairs. If she had stopped for a moment she would have realized that finding a medieval tower in the middle of a noising forest without any door in the entrance was too much strange. As if the tower was there only for her. Nevertheless, she didn't have time to think so she followed her instinct without knowing she was falling in the trap.

Stairs and more stars in a snail form that seemed not to end never. That thing had entered in the tower and she felt she hadn't many time. She didn't have anyone. All were dead. Her mum, her dad, her brother... everyone that she loved once were dead and now that thing that probably had killed her family was looking for her. "To be part of the royal family never had been an easy work" – her grandma used to say. But she never understood that because her life used to be so easy before the war. As she continued going up the stairs she reminded when things started to change for the worse: when the lord St. Gorge killed her father. Without a king, people started to panicked. Her mum covered the place of her dad as the queen, but anyone wanted her and that strange thing that was following her killed her mother one day. Her brother was the next. And now, the princess that deserved to be a queen was running in a tower to save her live instead of looking for her people to save them from the war. What type of queen she was?

As she arrived to the top she saw no way out. Just a large window that seemed to attract her. She thought nervously in any thing she could do to save herself, any advice of her granny or something like this. The noises were too close. She shut her eyes and she shouted. Any noise was there now. She heard in her head the voice of her grandma and in that moment she knew what to do. She was encouraged to open her eyes and nothing was there. She knew how to battle the thing that had been running after her. Because it wasn't anything with body, not even a dragon, they were demons. The demons of her head. She held her dress and looked into the window. She was going to save her kingdom. Because anyone was going to save her. Not even a knight. She didn't need them.

She was the queen,
And she was a warrior.
